

Dr. Sarah Nelson is an Assistant Professor in Neurology and Anesthesiology & Critical Care Medicine at Johns Hopkins University. After completing her undergraduate degree at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and medical degree at Stanford University School of Medicine, she completed her neurology residency at Tufts Medical Center followed by fellowship training at Massachusetts General Hospital and Brigham and Women's Hospital. She currently has research interests in the fields of neuroimaging, subarachnoid hemorrhage, intracerebral hemorrhage, and ischemic stroke.